Ten years later, graphic design company still flourishing

Like most entrepreneurs, Dan Brill had an abundance of talent and enthusiasm when he opened for business in 1999. But unlike most start-ups that fail within five years, danbrillDesigns is still going strong. Very strong. In the 10 years that Brill has been in business, his graphic design company's accomplishments are both impressive and enviable.

This small but vibrant group of talented professionals solves the communication problems of some of Cincinnati's largest – and smallest – businesses. They specialize in corporate identity, traditional print media design, custom e-media advertising and marketing, and custom website design and development.

By tapping the experience and creativity of each member of his talented team, Brill is able to deliver designs that are on-target and on-time. The team includes a web & Flash developer, marketing specialist, project manager, copywriter, and graphic designer. Their work, which can be found at danbrillDesigns.com, includes catalogues, collateral, packaging, signage, trade show displays, direct mail, websites and advertising campaigns.

Brill's customers appreciate his friendly, one-on-one approach to doing business. Relationship-building is key. "We aren't successful unless the work we provide our clients is successful," says Brill. "So we begin by developing a partnership. It may sound corny, but we truly are all on the same team."

Brill's approach works, as the Cincinnati USA Regional Chamber recently discovered. When the Chamber needed a vibrant, attention-getting pitch to be the host city for the 2009 Next Leaders Summit, they relied on the team at danbrillDesigns. In return they got, what they called, "a proposal that rocks!" Its hip, rock-n-roll approach was a success -- the Chamber won its bid and soon the city of Cincinnati will host this prestigious event.
